EXPLANATORY NOTES

1. Changes in vessel type, intended use (i.e. commercial or private), or applicant's identity, subsequent to receipt of the application will render the application and any permit issued invalid.
2. Transfer of berth by commercial operator on sale of business is only permitted if the operator is a limited liability company and was so at the time of original berth application.
3. Applicant must be a natural or legal person and a permit cannot be issued to bodies with no legal status.
4. A berth can only be applied for if the size and type of boat is stated on the application. A change to a boat of different dimensions renders this application invalid and a new application is required.
5. On allocation advice, immediate acceptance is required. Vessel must be ready to occupy. If vessel is not ready to occupy or applicant declines the berth offered, then application goes to the bottom of the list. If after berth is allocated, permit holder requests a relocation to another berth, a new application needs to be lodged.
6. Once allocated, berths are not transferable. Any change or variation in ownership or change in vessel may require a new application and existing berth to be vacated. However, this does not prevent a permit holder planning to acquire a vessel that would not be fit or suitable for the existing berth to apply for an additional berth and remain in the existing berth with the original vessel until the application matures.
